

The Iran and Hamas Wars' Effects on Israel's Relations in the Middle East and With U.S. Jewry

Iran had a big role in the two-year Hamas war and now, for the fourth and most destructive time, is fighting Israel directly. Will the impacts be temporary or transformative? What are the signs that Hamas, Hezbollah, the Houthis and Iran have significantly changed their outlooks on Israel? What preliminary observations can be made about the wars' impact on American Jewish views of Israel and on the fall elections?

Michael Eisenstadt, the Kahn Senior Fellow and director of the Military and Security Studies Program at the Washington Institute for Near East Policy, joins CIE President Ken Stein for an enlightening conversation.
