

The Transition of Tel Aviv 1948-2023

By: Ezra Adler and Adam Jacobson

For our project, we focused on the growth and transition of the Tel Aviv beach line from the 1940s until today. Although some of the images are deceiving because of the different angles the photos were taken, the viewer can clearly see the changes in both the beach area and the surrounding buildings throughout the years.

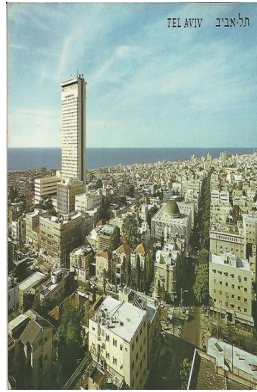

From the 80s until today, the Tel Aviv beach has become more popular throughout the world and has emerged as a huge tourist attraction. By the images, you can clearly see how un-crowded the beach was, and how every year more people are seen on the beach. In the past 20 years, the Tel Aviv beach has been packed with tourists and Israelis during Saturdays and holidays.

In the 1960s the Shalom Meir Tower was built. It was the tallest building in Asia until 2010 standing at a whopping 142 meters with 32 floors. In the following years, many tall buildings such as hotels, office buildings, and apartments were built to create a new skyline. As a result, today's visitor at Tel Aviv can see a full city with many different attractions including the beach, a huge market, and even a huge graffiti tour. Today, you can see how Tel Aviv has turned from a unpopular, run down city to one of the biggest modern cities in the world with many attractions.
